

Evangeline Gouletas Travels in European Style

Evangeline Gouletas, co-chairman of American Invsco Corp., recently attended the Ascot Derby among British royalty. The Ascot Derby is a British tradition that has been the highlight of the rich and famous attracting an international following. Ms. Gouletas, an avid equestrian herself, enjoys the beauty and excitement of the races. And more colorful than the race was a great opportunity to show off one's magnificent hat! Evangeline wore a Jacqué Fath black and white striped jacket with white portrait collar and cuffs, paired with a striking black linen hat by Genvieve Louis designs, from Harrod's. Among the celebrities that were dressed to perfection were Prince Charles, the Prince and Princess Michael de Kent, Princess Anne with Andrew Parker-Bowles, Edward's fiancée Sophie Rhys-Jones, top model Beth Carrender and Ivana and Ivanka Trump.

Evangeline enjoyed a royal concert and dinner at the renown, Kensington Palace, in the presence of H.R.H. Prince Michael of Kent K.C.V.O.. The spectacular event was to aid The Hyde Park Appeal "Liberty Drives," chaired by Chrsanthy and Panagiotis Lemos, well-known ship owners in Europe and friends of Evangeline. Among the many celebrities were Joan Collins and Ivana Trump with her husband Riccardo Mazzucchelli.

The dinner featured delectable cuisine by Monte's and an artistic program under the direction of Alexandre Myrat, an expert conductor in twentieth century music.

Evangeline claimed, "The music was extraordinary!" as La Camerata of Athens Orchestra played a variety of works from Mozart to contemporary Greek music. They were joined by the outstanding duo of George Petrou and Christos Papageorgiou, two young Greek concert pianists who are internationally acclaimed for their many worldwide performances. Alan Sieve-wright, the well known producer and broadcaster, introduced the royal concert.

"It was a fairy tale evening," said Evangeline, dressed like a princess in her Chris

Ms. Evangeline Gouletas with Mr. Panagiotis Lemos at The Royal Concert and Dinner at Kensington Palace in London.

Kole ivory chiffon dress with ivory lace bodice accented with gold thread and pleated chiffon. At midnight, she was escorted away in her horse and carriage.

Evangeline's love for the arts continued as she was a patron to a Midsummer Night's Concert of the European Academy for the Arts. The event was held at One Whitehall Place, a London landmark of architectural elegance, in the presence of H.R.H. Princess Michael of Kent. Evangeline was dressed in a Scaasi black sequined dress with alternate panels of sheer chiffon.

The internationally acclaimed orchestra, La Camerata of Athens, along with guest soprano Penelope Lousi, entertained the crowd until late in the evening. A stunning performance by the eminent Greek Piano Duo of George Petrou and Christos Papageorgiou captivated the audience as they played their award-winning piano works, including the debut of a new composition by Christos Papageorgiou.

After London, Evangeline flew to Greece

Ms. Evangeline Gouletas in Ascot fashion wearing a Jacqué Fath jacket and a striking black linen hat by Nigel Rayment, Genvieve Louis designs. At the Ascot Races in London.

where she hosted a very special dinner party for her close friends and family at the Karnagio Club in Pereaos. Among the guest list were Pantelis and Ioanna Voulgaris, Litsa Patera, Captain John Rousos and Zina Linardakis, who was selected as the only artist to paint the tribute to the Olympic Games in Atlanta.

The beautiful Astir Palace Hotel in Vouliagmeni once more was her hotel of choice, for Evangeline has always found a special place in her heart for this scenic landmark.

Mr. and Mrs. Pantelis Voulgaris, Greek legendary film director and his wife, a foremost author, hosted a dinner in honor of Evangeline and their valued friendship at the chic restaurant, The Koupia, in Glyfada. Among the VIP guest list were Statmatis M. Spanoudakis, the famous composer, who dedicated some of his music to her and Christos Papagiorgiou, award winning concert pianist of the Greek piano duo.

In fact, there was talk at dinner by Pantelis Voulgaris that he would direct a film about a "dynamic, beautiful Greek tycoon" and asked Engie if she would play that role....who more appropriate?

"Only if the film was on location in the

At The Lambros Restaurant in Athens, guest of Evangeline Gouletas. L: Litsa Patera, astrologist, Middle: Captain John Rousos, wine producers, R: Zina Linardakis, painter.

Greek Islands!" Evangeline said with a wistful smile.

Ms. Gouletas' focus of her visit to Europe was a combination of business transactions as well as social. While in London and Athens, she conducted numerous business development meetings with prominent financial institutions and business entrepreneurs ranging in real estate and financing investment opportunities from 50 to 150 million U.S. dollars.

Evangeline, from Patron of the Arts to confident businesswoman, she has graced Europe with a style all her own. Harmonizing business and social situations is an art she has perfected. Her love for the arts and the European communities continue to flourish, as Evangeline Gouletas performs her own symphony of life.